DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

1. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

2. Claims 1-9 and 25 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention is not supported by either a specific and substantial asserted utility or a well-established utility.

The claim as a whole needs to be directed to a practical application of an idea and not to an abstract idea itself. In this instance, one component provides data for analysis and the other does the analysis to compute probabilities based on the recited functions. Since there is no physical transformation, the practical application can be established by providing a useful (specific, substantial and credible utility), concrete (assured, repeatable) and tangible (real world, not abstract) result. This claim appears directed to two components for doing mathematical functions rather than a practical application of those functions in the real world. Thus, it appears to be directed to an abstract idea rather than a practical application of that idea, lacking at least a tangible result.

Claims 1-9 and 25 also rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph. Specifically, since the claimed invention is not supported by either a specific and substantial asserted utility or a well established utility for the reasons set forth above, one skilled in the art clearly would not know how to use the claimed invention.
